Juan Elias Jane Beatty Williams The Code of Hammurabi and I'm obviously not being 100% serious, but at the same time he's 18 and he's done this five times. I don't know if the last times were when he was a minor or they were all offenses while he was 18, but there needs to be harsher penalties for repeat offenders. If he was a minor committing these crimes in the past, then it's time we put in place harsher penalties for minors and treat them like adults. There is no difference mentally between a 17 year old and an 18 year old.

PEDESTRIAN RULES

It's the time of year to remind everybody about the laws governing pedestrians and vehicles!

Q: Do I have to stop for every person crossing the street?

A: In general, yes it's a good idea to do so. The law specifies that you MUST stop for all people crossing in marked crosswalks. It also designates when pedestrians should use those crosswalks. Even if they are crossing at a time when they shouldn't be, the law directs officers to make an assumption that the driver wasn't driving carefully if they hit that pedestrian. If they are out of a marked crosswalk but still at an intersection pedestrians are supposed to wait for the road to clear before entering. If you happen upon a person crossing at such an intersection, you have to stop for them if they are in the roadway. If they are crossing outside of a marked crosswalk or outside of an intersection the law states you have to yield, not stop for them. But again, in general, if there is somebody in the roadway already, it's a good idea to let them pass.

Q: I'm a pedestrian so don't cars have to stop for me in any crosswalk no matter what?

A: No, there are rules to when you can cross and when vehicles have to stop for you. Specifically the law states "No pedestrian shall leave a curb or other place of safety and walk or run into the path of a vehicle which is so close that it is impossible for the driver to yield or stop." How close is too close for somebody to stop is open to interpretation and depends on dozens of factors. Basically, it's a very bad idea to just walk out into the roadway thinking that vehicles have to stop for you. We've seen quite a few pedestrian accidents and it's no fun for the person hit by a car. It's generally a lot more fun, and less painful, to wait until the driver stops for you or until the road is clear.

As for the rules in a crosswalk, they are pretty simple. If there is a light at the intersection, you are legally allowed to cross when the signal governing your direction of travel shows green. As the law states, "Pedestrians shall not cross a roadway against the "stop" or red signal at a crosswalk, whether marked or unmarked, unless otherwise specifically directed to go by a traffic or police officer, or official traffic control device." If you start on green and the light changes, the pedestrian still has the right of way until they finish crossing.

If there is no signal at a crosswalk, the rules are that once you enter the roadway a driver is supposed to stop for you we hope this answered some common questions you may have. Feel free to speak to any officer and ask about how to safely navigate the roadways as both a pedestrian and driver.

Sandy Kurtz-Gerber The pedestrians think they can cross anywhere and cars have stop for them. It's horrible, adults, kids, bikes, strollers, I'm surprised that there are not more accidents.

David Kelly What is meant by 'documented emotional support animal'? It is not a concept in our legal system that results in others being obligated to tolerate the presence of another person's pet- by-another-name unlike 'service animal' which is an animal, overwhelmingly from one of a few breeds of dogs, who based on customized training, aids a disabled individual so they can maintain an autonomous existence.

Persons with a service animal must be accommodated by permitting the animal to accompany them where animals are not otherwise permitted- hospitals, restaurants, beaches, etc.

While it's true there is a tendency to acquiesce to the demands of those who believe their pets are (nearly human) that is a result of unchallenged bullying. It goes along with the unfortunate acceptance of the assertion that students must be given 'trigger warnings' that something about to occur might offend them.

It is necessary to reclaim the shared public space from those who believe their perceived
