that would be assessed would receive a "direct benefit" from the SID, noting he had originally requested that the Third Ward, which he represents, be removed from the district.

Fisher said that nothing about the decision was arbitrary, noting that a steering committee of business and property owners, herself, Marks, and a consultant had been working on designing the SID for two years.

She said many of those discussions were about whether or not to create a citywide SID or smaller neighborhood SIDs, but ultimately the committee decided a citywide SID made sense because everyone will benefit from its initiatives.

She noted that properties that would receive less of a benefit will pay a smaller assessment than properties on Washington Street that would receive a more obvious benefit.

According to council documents, there would be a 3.3 percent assessment on Washington Street properties, while properties in the "gateway south" sub-district in southwestern Hoboken would see a 0.81 percent assessment.

"I don't feel there is anything arbitrary about this," Fisher said.

Russo was the only dissenting vote.

proposal to the administration outlining the need for reform.

Proposal requests include mental health initiatives, more administrative transparency, a formal space for prayer, and the need for more and better-attended Safe Zone Training to promote tolerance of diverse gender identities and sexual orientations, among others.

The proposal also demands that the university's president, cabinet, and board of trustees publicly condemn the "discriminatory values, the same values shared by Greg Gianforte, in a campus-wide announcement, as well as readdress the concerns and ramifications of the naming on the Stevens Community with a committee containing at least 40 percent student representation."

It also demands that the Student Government Association be involved when the university forms future task forces, committees, or panels and demands that the university president, cabinet, and board of trustees meet with the SGA on a regular basis, at least three times per semester.

"This proposal is in no way an attack on the Stevens University name," the proposal states. "This proposal is for the uppermost administration to directly hear the concerns of students. We know that Stevens has the potential to be one of the most student-centric schools in the country. The student leaders on this campus are second to none, and we know that given the resources and full support of administration this campus can be changed for the better."

The 89,500-square-foot teaching and research facility officially opened Dec. 10.

More than 200 guests gathered at the Rosa and John H. Hovey '57 Staircase and Lobby for the ribbon-cutting celebration and opening remarks, where President Nariman Farvardin and Chairman of the Board Stephen T. Boswell ('89 Ph.D.'91 Hon. D. Eng.'13) expressed gratitude to the more than 20 donors who made the construction of the building possible and for the invaluable guidance from Hoboken elected officials and neighbors.

The Gianforte Family Hall and South Hall, connected by the glass sky bridge, contain 10 new smart classrooms, 13 labs, and 45 faculty offices.

Among the building's showcase spaces is the Mary Jane and Frank Semcer Sr. '65 Center for Healthcare Innovation, which aims to address gaps and issues related to advancing biomedical technology and healthcare delivery. It's outfitted with a 3D tissue culture lab, a dedicated room for DNA amplification, a
